Horses

What a judge might look for in horses:

- Good conformation which means the form or outline of an animal - the symmetrical arrangement of its parts. A proportionately well-built horse is symmetrical and smooth; each component part blends into other parts to give over-all balance, style, and beauty.
- The way the horse travels - how the horse performs while in motion.
- Depending on the breed, color may be of importance. Some breeds for which color is important are Paint, Pinto, Palomino and Appaloosa.

What a judge might look for in the show ring:

- Showmanship includes general appearance, how the rider sits in the saddle, how the rider controls its mount and how the horse responds to its rider's commands.
- In halter classes, the horse is judged on conformation depending on its breed's ideal characteristics.
- In performance classes, the horse and rider are judged. Some types of performance classes are based on different gaits the horse is put through. Some other performance classes are: jumping, driving (with carts or buggies), trail, and cattle classes (team penning, cutting, etc.).
- Timed or running events are some of the more exciting classes in horse shows. In these classes the fastest entry wins. Some timed events are barrels, cones and pole bending.
- Some horse shows include cattle classes. These classes test the horse and rider's ability to control cattle, whether it is to "cut" one calf from a herd of calves or to select a designated calf or group of calves from a herd and "pen" them.
- A good showman is polite and courteous to other exhibitors and pays attention to both the animal and to the judge.
